Professional Community Management of California, Inc. Celebrates PCAM Designated Community Manager

Becky Groenewold of San Diego earns top management recognition

LAKE FOREST, Calif. (January 5, 2011) – Becky Groenewold, Community Manager of Presidio Place Community Association in San Diego, earned the Community Associations Institute (CAI) designation of Professional Community Association Manager (PCAM). The PCAM designation is the highest professional recognition available nationwide to managers who specialize in community association management.

“This designation recognizes the experience and innovative thinking that Becky has brought to the community she serves on a daily basis,” said Donny Disbro, Chief Executive Officer of PCM. “In a service based industry such as ours, PCM supports and encourages the continual training and education of our community managers. Our growth and reputation ultimately depend on the innovative and customized service that we provide to our clients.”

Last year, Groenewold received the Vision Award for Creative Solutions in Problem Solving from the California Association of Community Managers. She also holds the designation of Association Management Specialist from Community Associations Institute and Certified Community Manager from the California Association of Community Managers. Presently, she is a board member for the CAI-San Diego Chapter and serves on the CAI membership committee and public relations committee. Groenewold and her husband live in North San Diego and have two sons currently serving in the military.

The Professional Community Association Manager designation is recommended for experienced managers who have demonstrated advanced skills and knowledge in their field. Prospective PCAM designees must have a minimum of five years’ experience, achieved both the Certified Manager of Community Management and the Association Management Specialist designations and have completed additional course work including a case study.
